SPEAK

Artistic Direction: Rina Mehta, Rachna Nivas, Michelle Dorrance, and Dormeshia Sumbry-Edwards

66

"These women welcome the collision of their individual genres, using their art as a container for the larger conversation about connection. The reach across the perceived divide engages, entertains and educates."

- Amy Seiwart, Amy Seiwart Imagery

66

"The East spoke to the West without using words. It made you feel nothing else matters as long as we can experience beauty like this. Humanity will triumph in-spite of all the adverse events happening around us."

- SPEAK Audience Member

Son of the Wind

Artistic Direction: Seibi Lee, Rachna Nivas, and Rina Mehta

66

"As a Ramayana scholar who also enjoys dance, I was struck both by the production's sophisticated conception...and by the professionalism of its execution by an all-female cast... Given that traditional lila performances of epic stories in India generally feature exclusively male casting, even in female roles, the gender reversal here was striking, especially given the predominant martial mood (vīra rasa) of most of the episodes"

66

"With its technical brilliance, emotional power, and reverent yet creative reinterpretation of sacred epic, 'Son of the Wind,' staged by American women of a variety of ethnic backgrounds, was world-class transnational dance theater that celebrated Indian performance traditions even as it innovated within them and challenged cultural stereotypes."

- Philip Lutgendorf, Ramayana Scholar, University of Iowa

Leela Dance Collective - The Pipeline

The Leela Dance Collective's repertoire is grounded in the belief that art can be a powerful catalyst for personal transformation, community building and social change. Through its traditional works, Leela brings the depth and breadth of India's artistic gifts onto the world stage and provides a way for communities and cultures to be made visible. Leela's collaborative works provide vital avenues for connection, bringing together artists and audiences separated by race, religion, and class. Leela's pipeline of artistic works aims to preserve the core of the kathak tradition while at the same time evolving the tradition to make it relevant and accessible to contemporary audiences.

2016-2020 Son of the Wind Son of the Wind is a spectacular retelling of the Ramayana episodes centered around Hanuman, featuring a cast of renowned kathak and Hindustani musical artists from around the world.

2015-2019 SPEAK

A collaborative work that brings two art forms and communities together while bringing to the forefront a new generation of female voices and perspectives in kathak and tap dance.

2018-2022 Pilgrimage

A collaborative work that brings kathak dance together with the folk music of India's desert state, Rajesthan and the Romani music tradition of Europe.

2020-2024

Pancha Jati

The Leela Dance Collective restages one of legendary artist, Pandit Chitresh Das' most innovative works - Pancha Jati, an exploration and synthesis of North and South Indian rhythm.

2024-2028

Imagine India

A spectacular work that brings nine of India's classical dance and music traditions together onto the world stage to celebrate the richness and diversity of India's artistic and cultural heritage.

2022-2026

Elan

India and Spain come alive on the stage through powerful footwork, lyrical movement, haunting music and intensive emotion as the artists of Elan come together in what can only be described as a long awaited communion.

The Mechanics of Performance Art

The life cycle of works such as SPEAK and Son of the Wind begins with a spark of creative inspiration. The journey from this spark to a fully-formed work of performance art is long, intense, and filled with unexpected detours and discoveries. From research and development to the premiere performance and touring, every phase of the process requires a significant investment of time and resources to ensure a standard of excellence and far-reaching impact.

Research (1-2 years)

$10,000 - $20,000

Extraordinary works of performance art are almost always grounded in strong research. The research phase can involve academic study of history, mythology and performance art as well as ethnographic study of artists and art forms.

Development (1-2 years)

$20,000 - $40,000

Artists come together from around the world to test ideas and experiment. An iterative process that is mostly trial and error begins as artists work on the development of a musical score, choreography and stage design.

Premiere Performance (1-3 days)

$40,000 - $60,000

After years in development, a work is presented on the main stage. Venues are chosen based on factors ranging from cost, audience strength, and technical capacity. New works are often self-presented and as such dance companies bear the full cost of the performance.

Touring (3-5 years) $35,000 - $40,000

Exceptional works that have the ability to reach audiences will typically begin their touring cycle 1-2 years after the premiere. International and national touring often involves fostering strong partnerships with key presenters in first and second tier cities and a high level of grassroots audience and community engagement.

Building New Audiences, Enriching Community Life

A recent study published by the National Endowment for the Arts documents the steady decline of arts audiences over the past two decades. Between 1992 and 2012, audiences for performing arts events (jazz, classical music, opera, ballet, and theatrical plays) decreased from 41% to 33.4%. While we don't have analogous data for the Indian performing arts, anecdotal evidence paints a similar if not more dire picture.

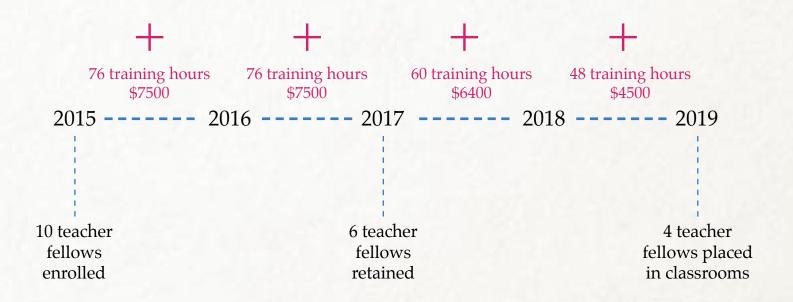

The Westernization of our global culture along with the advent of technology has dramatically transformed the ways in which newer generations of Indians and Indian Americans engage with arts and culture. Individual and family choices today, informed in large part by access and societal trends, overwhelmingly lean in the direction of entertainment versus art, whether it be at the movie theater, in the arena, or on the internet. Over time, these choices lead to our communities becoming artistically and culturally impoverished and disconnected from our heritage, our history and ourselves.

We at The Leela Academy are keenly aware of this larger context in which we operate. We seek to serve not only the children and youth that participate in our educational programs but also the communities in which we are embedded. Our work begins in the classroom but extends far into our communities where we endeavor to increase access to world-class Indian classical music and dance. Free concerts, family programming at professional arts venues, and performances in schools are some of the ways in which we strive to integrate the classical Indian performing arts into everyday community life. In doing so, we hope to build new audiences for classical Indian dance and music, enrich our communities, and advance India's rich artistic and cultural heritage.

The Making of an Arts Educator

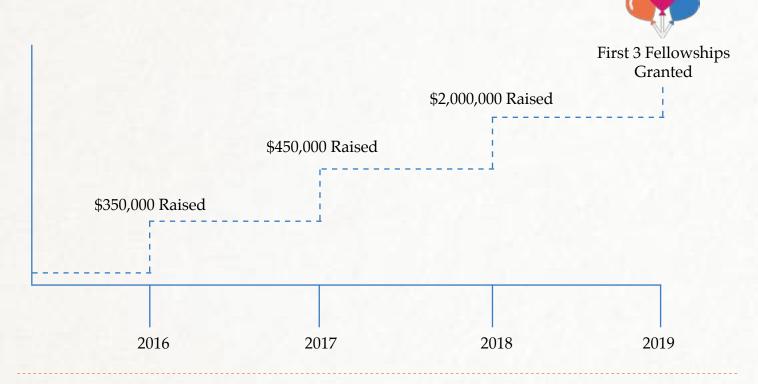

Leela's Teach the Arts program works to train a new kind of educator- one that will enter into a long-term relationship with their students that extends far beyond the classroom and shepherd their development as self-defined artists and leaders. The program provides rigorous training in subject matter specifics and teaching pedagogy along with extensive leadership development. And as such, it demands a significant investment of time and resources from both the organization and those dedicated and talented individuals that chose to undertake the task of becoming an arts educator.

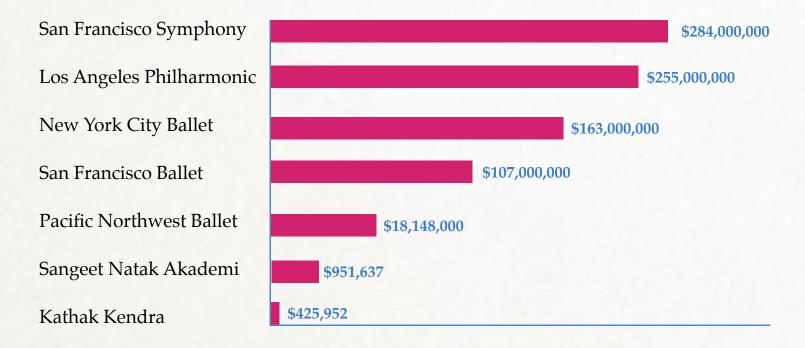

The Leela Endowment

The Leela Endowment is the first and only one of its kind, providing the financial infrastructure necessary to advance and elevate Indian classical dance and music on the world stage. It aims to provide direct financial support to emerging and established artists that serve as India's artistic and cultural ambassadors through annual fellowships ranging from $10,000 - $25,000.
